

Open Forum: Space for Dialogue in a Time of Growing Polarisation

A space to express yourself. A space to be heard.

Are you concerned about the growing polarization of society, public debates on gender and LGBTQ+ issues, or the impact these discussions have on our lives and communities?

We warmly invite you to participate in a facilitated discussion forum - a space created for LGBTQ+ people. Together, we will explore topics that matter to our communities: from experiences of homophobia and transphobia in daily life, issues of safety and vulnerability, and societal polarization, to subjects that can be difficult to discuss even within our own communities - conversations that may be hardest to have with one another. While LGBTQ+ communities share many common experiences, they are also incredibly diverse. We hope this space can embrace both aspects.

The Open Forum is a structured, facilitated dialogue focused on issues that affect us all. It is about coming together to support our community - whatever that means for each of us. This may include addressing the tensions, conflicts, or polarization that arise among us. The goal is not to determine who is right or wrong, but to create a space where diverse experiences, emotions, and perspectives can be voiced and heard.

The Open Forum offers an opportunity to listen to others - and to ourselves - in a different way: with greater openness, humanity, and understanding. Whether you want to share your experiences, listen, or simply be among others, you are welcome. People of all identities falling under the LGBTQ+ umbrella are welcome. It is a confidential and non-judgmental space.
